

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

In a heat development method for performing heat development by applying light or heat onto a heat-developable recording material including a photothermographic material or a light-sensitive heat-sensitive recording material, it has been configured such that the target temperature of a heater is increased than normal immediately after the start-up of the heat development apparatus, and subsequently, the increase range is reduced with time.